USHSP402	Human Development Principles of	3	50	2
	Working with Adolescents and Adults

1. To introduce students to three types of techniques (group games and activities; street plays; focus group interviews) employed in Human Development and allied fields when working with adolescents and adults.

2. To build elementary skills in using three types of techniques (group games and activities; street plays; focus group interviews) that are relevant for working with adolescents and adults in Human Development and allied fields.

Unit	Topic	No. of Periods
Ι	(a) Overview of the course	15
	(b) Group games and activities to foster developmental assets (e.g., self-esteem, interpersonal competence) among adolescents and adults Overview of group games and activities as method of fostering developmental assets among adolescents and adults Brief overview of the characteristics of selected age-group of adolescents/adults as relevant for group games and activities Group games and activities to foster developmental assets (e.g., self-esteem, interpersonal competence, building values) among adolescents and adults:
	The teacher facilitates students in playing each of a series of group games (small-group and large-group games) and engage in group activities which promote developmental assets.
	Each activity/game is a reflexive exercise. A teacher-moderated reflexive discussion follows the game. Students write their reflections on each activity/game in their journal afterwards.
	Next, students devise their own game/activity along with a list of discussion questions on the developmental asset(s) of their choice.
	Board Game : Small-group activity: Introduction to devising a board game on any issue pertaining to the students. This is achieved in stages 1 through 7 as follows:
	Identifying/listing and discussing issues.
	Selecting one issue to work on (with the help of the teacher).
	Goal Setting: Identifying and specifying the goal(s) which will help address the selected issue.
	Identifying steps that lead to or detract from achieving the goal:
	Making two lists (one for steps that lead to achievement of goal; second list of obstacles or deterrents that detract from the achievement of goal).
	Planning a creative way to use these steps leading to or detracting from the goal to make a board game (layout, graphics, accessories, number of players, rules, scoring).
	Making of the board game.

	Presentation/displaying/using of the board game.
	Playing on each other's board games.
II	(a) Introduction to dramatization techniques used in human	15
	development and allied fields.	10
	(b) Street plays to sensitise audience to socially-relevant issues pertaining to human development (e.g., women's empowerment, ageism)
	Overview of street play as a technique
	Brief overview of the characteristics of selected age-group of adolescents/adults as relevant for street plays Viewing of a street play (YouTube or other video)
	In two groups (within one practical group), making a list of socially-relevant issues pertaining to human development (e.g., women's empowerment, ageism)
	Selecting an issue to work on (with the teacher's guidance).
	Scripting the street play, working on theatrical presentation in the street play, rehearsing the street play.
	Performing the street play in front of an audience (within the college
TTT	or outside the college to a target group).	15
III	(a) Introduction to interviews used in human development and allied fields.	15
	(b) Focus group interviews to enable guided reflection on key topics pertaining to human development (e.g., intergenerational relationships)
	Overview of focus group interviews as a technique Brief overview of the characteristics of selected age-group of adolescents/adults as relevant for focus groups Demonstration of an FGI by the teacher.
	In smaller groups, making of a list of key topics pertaining to human development (e.g., intergenerational relationships) that can be used for focus group interviews.
	Selecting an issue to work on (with the teacher's guidance).
	Designing and executing one focus group interview: Participating in a focus group interview with each group member taking turns in being the moderator.
	Each student then switches to another sub-group and facilitates the FGI with that sub-group.

Method:

- Overview of the course is shared in the first session.
- For each unit, many of the exercises are done in subgroups (ranging from 3-4 for board games to 10-12 for the street play).
- Reflexive exercises that follow the main activities can be done in the large group through a discussion, as well as individually through writing in the journal after the practical.
- Students are expected to maintain a portfolio of activities.
