legal research. The department has imparted legal education catering to the present demands of the society. The department has further succeeded in producing Academicians, lawyers of competence and expertise

Theme of the Conference

Considering the important socio-economic implications of the IP system, the reform and implementation of new IP obligations should constitute a participatory and coherent process where producers, competitors, and consumers all have a voice. At the government level, an inter-ministerial approach should facilitate a wider consideration of the public interest and its different sensitivities and forms, particularly with respect to the impacts of IP policies on sustainable development priorities. In undertaking these reforms the IP system should respond to numerous issues and challenges.

About the Conference
