When did you last laugh at a Sardar joke? Also, when did you last think about the constructs of 'otherness' within which it is placed?

This talk will focus on the images and stereotypes surrounding the Sikh community and how they impact general perception. Join in to listen about the socio historical contexts through which these images have evolved and the meta discourse, placed within which, they sometimes become objectionable.

The focus is on Sikhs in the homeland, and in Canada, where they finally seem to be emerging from negative images, in which they had long been caught.
